Katimavik group used food bank

By SARAH GLEN
A FEDERAL youth group visiting Terrace has been ordered to stop taking bread from a local food bank.

The Katimavik program regularly stations groups of young people in Terrace for about two months at a time to do volunteer work.

This particular group has been here almost two months and has been taking dated bread donated to the Salvation Army's food bank about once a week.

Dated bread and buns are given by local bakeries to the Salvation Army to help feed needy local families.

The local Katimavik group has been taking bread to avoid making its own, which is part of its mandate.

"We take the bread because it's free and we often don't have the time to make it [bread] from scratch," said Scott Brandon, a Katimavik member here.

"Baking bread instead of buying it is one aspect of the Katimavik experience," said Christine Rocheleau, communications advisor for Katimavik headquarters in Montreal.

The group here is part of the national Katimavik program, which gives youth between 17 to 21 years old a chance to travel and live for seven months in communities across Canada.

Katimavik operates on a $12 million annual budget from the federal government to cover transportation, food and lodging. Each group gets about $5 a day for each group member for food.

Brandon said the idea to take the Salvation Army bread instead of making it came from one of the group's leaders, Justine Dawson.

"She said that the cost of living was higher here and it would be more expensive to buy all the ingredients when we could get free bread," said Brandon of Dawson.

Dawson does acknowledge that she came up with the idea to take the free bread, but only after a former Katimavik member who was working at the food bank told her about the bank's bread surplus.

"I was told that it [the bank] has so much extra bread that they fed it to the dogs," Dawson said. "I would never take bread from people if I thought they needed it."

David Sessford, the director of community and family services for the Salvation Army food bank is surprised the group would take free bread, but notes that "there is a lot of bread."

"The service is there for those in need," said Sessford. "I would assume that the group must've been hungry."

But Sessford doesn't ever remember the bank's extra bread being giving to dogs.

"We donate our extra bread to chicken farms in the community," he said.

Sessford estimates that the bank gives about 10 loaves to the farms every few days, but only after the loaves have stayed in the shelves for awhile.

"We have to make sure that the bread is not needed [before donating it the farms]," he said.

If the Katimavik food budget is strained, Brandon hasn't noticed.

He said that the "fridge is always full" at the Katimavik house and he has never gone hungry.

"We do pretty well on our budget I think," he said.

MOMMA - a drag queen famous in Los Angeles nightclubs - flew here last Friday for a week of shooting a television pilot featuring Terrace and the politics of the gay pride issue.

Whole lotta Momma going on

Drag queen takes aim at gay pride issue here

By JEFF NAGEL

A FLAMBOYANT Hollywood drag queen is in town continuing his mission to probe city council's refusal to issue a gay pride proclamation.

"Momma" - a giant six-foot-four, 350-lb gay man dressed as a woman - arrived Friday with a camera crew from Docu-Drama Queen Productions, an outlet hoping to turn Momma's exploits into a TV series.

They leave tomorrow at the end of six days of shooting.

Momma and her crew visited the Farmer's Market Saturday morning before heading to the drag races at the airport to get reaction there.

Although most city councillors are either out of town or reluctant to talk, Momma's strategy is to explore the issue by talking to other residents.

"I'm not here to go after or to attack seven people," he said. "I'm actually trying to allow the majority in this town who don't feel like the city council to try to create a bigger voice. To let them know they don't represent the majority in this town."

Momma sported a well-padded rainbow-coloured gown, sequined fishnet stockings, giant faux pearls, colourful gum ball bracelets and an assortment of other colourful, glittering accessories.

His hair is a flaming red bouffant, his eye shadow multicoloured, and his eyelashes are enormous.

Locals reacted with double-takes, mostly followed by bemused smiles, but occasionally looks of disgust or fear.

"I don't bite," he assured them. "Why are people afraid of a man in a dress? Women are allowed to wear pants but if a man tries to become a little glamorous there's something drastically wrong with that."

Many didn't want to appear on camera with Momma.

But those who did bantered playfully with the drag queen.

Asked about council's gay pride decision, many called the situation silly and said council has mishandled the issue.

"Society could benefit from being more tolerant," said Davis Lindsay. "I know what it's like not to fit in. I was teased as a kid for having red hair and I couldn't imagine what it would be like to stand out even more."

Others watched apprehensively, saying they expect Terrace will end up as the butt of a large joke, and be portrayed as a backwards hick town.

"They'll edit out whatever they want, and add whatever they want," said Peter Arcadi. "It's a big publicity stunt."

He said a pride proclamation by the city is unnecessary, and that gay people shouldn't need to seek approval from the state.

The show's producers, one of whom is originally from Terrace, said they decided to come here after hearing about council's decision.

"People here are very gay-friendly, very gay-supportive and what the council has done is not reflective of the community," said producer Daniel Leipnik.

He is planning to sell Momma's visit to Terrace as the first show in a series of real TV-type docudramas.

"This will be shot on the run and is going to follow the trend of other real TV shows," said Leipnik.

The TV series, which Leipnik calls Momma's Moments, hasn't been bought by a production company yet.

Land-use talks to end in secrecy

By JEFF NAGEL

A CRITICAL meeting later this month to conclude a land-use plan for the region will be held behind closed doors.

Kalum Land and Resource Management Plan table members meet again here Aug. 21-22.

The August meeting is expected to see the final decisions made on how to achieve the table's goal of protecting grizzly bear habitat without crippling the local forest industry.

But this time, says coordinator Eamon O'Donoghue, news reporters and members of the public will be barred from the room.

That's because some table members were uncomfortable with news coverage by the Standard in June that detailed the debate at that month's meeting, he said.

Reported statements made it clear biologists were running out of ideas to ease timber impacts while protecting bear habitat, and that foresters fear the plan's effects could seriously hurt industry's viability.

While nothing was incorrect in the story, O'Donoghue said, reported comments made "in the heat of discussion" made it difficult for table members to explain the debate to the groups and organizations they represent.

"I polled the table to see if they wanted to have the last meeting in-camera," he said. "The feeling was that they did."

"For this Aug. 21 meeting they wanted just the group there themselves."

Meanwhile, technical groups of foresters and biologists have been meeting to crunch numbers and assess proposals made at the last meeting, he said.

That should lead to a more concrete estimate of the effect on the regional timber supply - and by extension jobs - of the plan's environmental planks.

O'Donoghue said early work in the technical groups suggests a deal is possible that will be acceptable to forest industry players.

"They're certainly concerned about the impacts," he said. "But they say this looks a lot more workable than it did a few months ago."

If an agreement can be reached at the August meeting, he said, the final Kalum land-use plan will go out to public review in September.

It would then be signed by LRMP participants after any final adjustments are made at a ratification meeting in late September or early October.

Longer sockeye fishery criticized

By KEITH FREEMAN

A THREE-day extension of the gillnet fishery around the mouth of the Skeena is drawing fire from a local sport fishing guide.

Jim Culp of Rivers Edge Lodge says the Department of Fisheries and Oceans "caved in" to provincial government and industry pressure in extending the sockeye fishery by three days.

"[The gillnetters] have done quite well this year, catching 1.2 million sockeye, the most in many, many years," he said. "The commercial industry is making out that they've been shafted."

Culp says he has the support of the sport fishing community here, and hopes DFO will continue its policy of ensuring conservation come first.

The gillnet fishery was extended three days to July 21, after calls for a longer extension and a ten per cent mortality rate on upper Skeena coho.

In a letter sent to federal fisheries minister Herb Dhaliwal, Culp says he's concerned about going back to the "confrontational way of doing business."

Last week, angry gillnetters burned an effigy of DFO Director General Donna Petrachenko, and held a harbour protest.

Free bus service okayed for Riverboat Days

RIDING the bus will be free during the Riverboat Days weekend.

City council approved spending up to $2,000 to ensure expanded bus service at no charge during the weekend.

Councillors hope use of the service will help reduce traffic and parking congestion, particularly for large and popular events like the parade or fireworks.

And they also hope more people will try the bus and use it more often the rest of the year.

Two extra trips are to be added Saturday morning between Thornhill and the Skeena mall, augmenting regular Thornhill service to provide access to the parade downtown and slingers race at the Northern Motor Inn.

Saturday afternoon, between 1:00 and 4:30 p.m., a shuttle is to operate every 20 minutes between the Skeena Mall and the salmon barbecue at Kitsumkalum village.

On Sunday one bus is to provide an all-day link from downtown, the south side and Thornhill to the old Skeena River bridge festivities and the slingers race.

A second bus would provide afternoon shuttle service every 20 minutes between the Skeena Mall and Heritage Park via the Mountain Vista, McConnell and Halliwell neighbourhoods.

If it goes well, the city may subsidize free bus service on the weekend every year, and expand the idea to other events.

The extra cost of the service is about $650, but council budgeted more to cover advertising costs.

Drag queen says he does it for the money

THE MAN behind the makeup says he doesn't live as a drag queen all the time.

Just for special occasions.

Momma, who won't give his real name, dresses as a woman because he's good at it and it earns him money.

This week he's on the payroll of a production company filming what they hope will be the pilot of a series of TV docudramas. Their target is city council and its handling of the gay pride issue here.

"I only dress this way when there's money involved," Momma says.

He explains he's not a transvestite who wears women's clothes as a sexual fetish, but rather a gay man who has come up with a successful and commercially viable performing character.

"I don't have a psychological need to dress like this," he said.

Dressing in drag for the first time six years ago was part of his personal process of healing after years with a Christian group called Ex-Gay Ministries that aimed to "cure" he and other gay people of their homosexuality.

"After eight years, I realised I had a lot of inward pain."

Momma still calls himself a born-again Christian.

He's also been a minister with Four Square Ministry, a branch of Pentecostal demonination Assembly of God.

The first time Momma donned a dress he won a contest that included a free agent and his career as a performer began.

"I developed Momma as a way to reach people who wouldn't normally warm up to me," said Momma.

Momma now has years of credits under his belt now performing in drag in the Los Angeles club scene and has had numerous jobs on television and the stage, including the part as Chiciolina in Franco Zeffirelli's opera, Placido Domingo.

This is Momma's first visit to Terrace, although he once spent time in Alaska.

Before his visit here, he was holding workshops in Washington to help develop a higher level of acceptance for gay Christian people.

"When gay Christians are denied their spirituality and sexuality it leaves a gaping whole in their development," Momma said.

Film groups helped Momma production

A CITY-FUNDED office charged with promoting film industry activity here did all it could in aiding drag queen Momma's visit to Terrace.

The Terrace Economic Development Authority knew in advance Momma's film crew was coming to shoot a documentary focusing on city council's handling of the gay pride issue, said executive director Ken Veldman.

"Despite the controversial nature of the project we felt the best thing to do is to treat it as we would any other production company," Veldman said.

It was referred to his office by the Prince George Film Commission, which acts as the central clearing house for film industry inquiries in the north.

Veldman says his office takes an open for business approach to all queries about potential investment in Terrace, "rather than picking and choosing different business projects."

The Momma production, he added, involved an eight-person production crew here for a week expected to spend between $10,000 and $20,000 in town.

National memo enforces rules

While most Katimavik groups budget to feed 11 people, the Terrace's group rounds out at only seven members.

That means Dawson gets close to $1000 a month to feed the group.

Rocheleau says she is "disappointed" that a group would use a food bank.

"This action by the group in Terrace is definitely not something Katimavik condones," said Rocheleau.

A memo was sent to all Katimavik group leaders July 27, reinforcing Katimavik's rules.

The program places about youth in 81 communities nation-wide since 1977.

Over and above their all-expenses paid tour of Canada, Katimavik members receive $3 a day for personal expenses and a $1,000 lump sum at the end of their volunteer period.

Civil servant wins award

RESIDENTS OF Rosswood were left in the dark until Mary Ann Burdett issued permits allowing them to hook up their homes to hydro power.

That and other facets of Burdett's work with the provincial civil service was recently acknowledged with a silver award by the province.

"I was totally surprised," she said. "I am very pleased (about the award)."

Burdett, who has been working in Terrace issuing gas, boiler and electrical permits for 26 years, was humble about the award.

"I didn't do anything special," she said. "It's just part of my job."

But colleague and nominator Ian Howells saw Burdett working selflessly through lunches to help the residents of Rosswood obtain permits once the decision was made to electrify the community.

She also provided Howells with maps and directions to the various places in Rosswood up for inspection.

And although reluctant to admit it, Burdett acknowledges she put a lot of time in to ensure the project well.

"Everything went quite smoothly," she said.

For Burdett it was an especially interesting job because it allowed her to meet the people from Rosswood.

"They have always been disassociated from Terrace ... they tend to live a more rural lifestyle," she said adding some residents were hesitant to receive power hookups because of their lifestyle.

"Some people just prefer to live without it," she said.

Burdett explained it was a community decision by the people of Rosswood to bring in power, requiring the co-operation of the area.

"They had to be united," she said. "They needed to get enough support to make it work."

And for Burdett, the only person who can issue permits to have power installed, it made for some busy days at the office.

But looking back it was a project she was happy to be involved in.

"Now when I see faces (from Rosswood) I wonder how they are liking their power," she said.

Burdett also helped co-ordinate inspections by order of priority that Howells made to various places damaged by the Skeena flood of 1999.

Having power restored minimized further damage.

"This coordination on her part saved a tremendous amount of time in getting people the inspection they required," said Howells.

MARY ANN BURDETT has been recognized by the province for her role in dealing with last year's floods and for help with the Rosswood hydro project.

Natives take political aim

By JEFF NAGEL

THE SKEENA riding is high on the list of areas where aboriginal groups want to bring their weight to bear in the next federal and provincial elections.

Native leaders think there are as many as a dozen B.C. ridings where a strong aboriginal turnout at the polls could be decisive, says Bill Wilson of the B.C. First Nations Summit.

Wilson said the strategy is to concentrate on encouraging native people to participate in existing political parties in their ridings.

It's hoped that could lead to increased aboriginal influence in candidate selection and platform, or possibly even aboriginal candidates.

"We want to get more aboriginal people involved in provincial and national white men's politics," Wilson said.

Come election time, he said, it's hoped a concerted campaign can at least ensure more native voters get registered and ideally channel their vote behind one pro-native candidate.

"We're not about to form an Indian party or anything," Wilson added. "We'll support a Liberal or an NDP. Or if there's a Reformer with a conscience, we'll support them."

Skeena federally is of particular interest because it's held by Alliance aboriginal affairs critic Mike Scott, who has been reviled by natives for his opposition to the Nisga'a treaty.

"It's the home of the Nisga'a and the Haidas and the Tsimshians and the Gitksans and Wet'suwet'ens, and all these other people against whom he has fought," Wilson said of Scott.

Skeena was held for many years by pro-native NDP MP Jim Fulton, he said, adding many people believe the time is right to correct "this aberration, this right-wing glitch we ended up with in Mike Scott."

Natives are offended by Scott and the Alliance, he added, because their policies and rhetoric whip up anti-native sentiment.

"They're fanning the flames of racism while hiding behind this assumption of one law for all," Wilson said. "Where were these bastards when our people were in residential schools, when our people couldn't vote, or when our war veterans came back and couldn't get land?"

Wilson said Skeena is one of at least 12 federal ridings in B.C. where aboriginal people make up 10 to 25 per cent of the vote.

A significant chunk of the vote put behind the most pro-aboriginal candidate could be decisive, he said, adding that was what helped in 1972 elect Dave Barrett's NDP government in B.C.

Skeena Alliance MP Mike Scott welcomes efforts by natives to promote their causes in upcoming federal and provincial elections.

"We're in a democracy and flawed as it might be, the democratic process is the best way to resolve conflict," said Scott in response to comments by provincial native leader Bill Wilson.

"I'm pleased to see leaders such as Mr. Wilson recognize the democratic process," said Scott.

"At the end of the day, by participating in the process, I would hope Mr. Wilson and others would then accept the results the same way I would."

Lights to help landings at the airport

NEW RUNWAY lights at the airport will improve safety, says manager Rick Reed.

Known as an omni-directional approach lighting system, the equipment is comprised of a line of strobe lamps that flash one after the other in a "lead-in" pattern, said Reed.

The system is already on one end of the main runway and this one will be installed at the other end.

The lights assist pilots in lining their planes up with the runway during landings.

"It's something we desperately need for the airport," said Reed, adding it'll be safer for planes to land when there are low cloud ceilings and poor winter weather conditions.

"They're virtually maintenance free," Reed said.

The new system could be in place as early as September.

Rod Nelson, a spokesman for Transport Canada, said although the new lights are the industry standard the current ones in place are not in violation of airport safety standards.

The federal government is contributing $164,300 in grant money under the Airports Capital Assistance Program - a fund set up for privately-owned airports to draw on if they need money for safety equipment upgrades.

The amount translates into about 95 per cent of the bill, said Reed, with the Terrace-Kilmat Airport Society, which owns the airport, paying the rest.

Passengers won't have to worry about flight delays due to the construction. The airport only handles four flights a day and it will be possible for the work to be completed while there is regular air traffic.

"It really isn't complicated work," said Reed.

The job involves digging a trench and laying down cables for the new lights - which should take about a month to complete.

The existing set of lights will be used right until the switch-over can be made.

The money being used is part of $327,300 which was given to the airport last April. About half of the money has already been spent on the purchase of a runway sweeper.

Parking

IF THERE'S one thing that people who live in small towns regard as a constitutional right, it's parking. There's this assumption out there that we should expect to park within mere feet of our destination and if we don't, we get pretty grouchy.

Which brings us to the Saturday morning farmers' market congestion along Davis as motorists and pedestrians compete for space, making it crowded and unsafe. The growing popularity of the market has come to the point that adjacent parking spots alongside George Little Park are often full.

So it was no wonder that when council began to enforce its no parking signs on Davis that trouble began to brew. Council's response is to now cover those signs and plan to install curbs and angle parking slots next year.

But will that solve the problem? Not really. In many ways, the market is a victim of its own success and there is a good case to be made that the market has outgrown its current location.

Two years ago the idea of perhaps moving the market to a location offering more amenities and parking was broached at Terrace city council. This resulted in accusations that council wanted to do away with the market altogether. Things then became rather personal until a lease suitable to the market was signed that gave it comfort as to its location.

Perhaps it's time once again to consider the idea of a new location for the market. It's proven itself as a solid Terrace fixture and is one of the busiest such markets outside of the lower mainland.

A new and better location, worked out in harmony between the market and city council, would be a suitable recognition for what the market has become today.

Gas pains

METHANEX says it'll close its Kitimat methanol plant permanently if it doesn't get some kind of cost relief.

Part of that cost comes in transmission fees charged by Pacific Northern Gas to move Methanex's gas from the northeast to Kitimat.

The prospect of losing that revenue, says PNG, means the rest of us will have to pay more to maintain the pipeline. In anticipation of that, it's applying for a rate increase. But it's doing so without an airing of Methanex's cost relief plan.

PNG should put its rate hike request on hold until we have a chance to judge the Methanex plan. That's because the Methanex plan calls for us to shoulder some of its costs with the anticipation of sharing profits.

Since they both want our help, we must be in a position to judge each plan's worthiness.

Spare the rod and spoil the child

VICTORIA - Last week, Canadians were told by Statistics Canada that crime rates have fallen to their lowest levels in 20 years.

Comforting news, indeed, until one reads between the lines. True, the overall crime rate is down, but violent crime and youth crime have sharply increased. In fact, violent crime overall rose by 57 per cent over the last 20 years.

If you cull youth crime from the overall violent crime rate, it gets even scarier. The number of minors charged with violent crime went up by 77 per cent over the last 10 years.

The topper is violent crimes committed by young girls, which rose by 127 per cent since 1988, with the most marked increases in categories such as murder and hostage-taking.

These statistics probably mean a new round of pinning the blame on everything from violent movies and video games to dietary deficiencies.

While virtual violence may arguably have a desensitizing effect on young people and thereby lower the threshold of what is acceptable and what isn't, the root causes for the staggering rise in youth crime go back to a time when video games had not yet been invented and movie violence was still to come.

FROM THE CAPITAL
 HUBERT BEYER

It was the permissiveness preached by Dr. Spock and the state's intrusion into what was hitherto the domain of parents that raised the generation of Canadians who are now the parents of the youths responsible for the sharp increase in crime committed by young people.

Spock was half right in the design of his model for raising children. Love and forgiveness are very much necessary to raising children. But he forgot the other half that is equally important for the development of a child - the realization that every transgression has a consequence. That consequence is punishment.

And I don't mean just grounding or the withdrawal of privileges. That may be enough for minor misdeeds. For major wrongs, a parent should not be afraid to put the little beggar over his or her knee and administer a few slaps on the behind.

Yet, we have been so conditioned as a society to view any kind of physical punishment as violence and abuse that millions of parents were astounded last week when a court ruled that physical punishment of children is constitutional and not to be viewed as abuse.

I know of cases where teachers instructed their pupils to phone the abuse help line if their parents laid the slightest hand on them. This isn't that far removed from teachers telling me in my native Germany during the war to notify the authorities if our parents uttered any criticism of Hitler.

The court saying that it is OK under certain circumstances to administer corporal punishment was the first encouraging sign that maybe, just maybe, we are beginning to realize that the pendulum has swung too far.

Well-meaning people often tell me that today's young people aren't as bad as one would think from media accounts. And they invariably tell me of young people they know who are damned good kids.

I don't doubt it for a moment. I, too, know a lot of good kids, who do not commit crimes, who volunteer in hospitals, who work on environmental projects. But the statistics are there for anyone to see. Youth crime has reached staggering proportions.

There are other things we can do, aside from reinforcing parental authority, to stem the tide of youth crime. It, too, means realizing that each action has its consequence.

Anne McLellan, the justice minister, promised two years ago to overhaul the Young Offenders Act. She has yet to deliver on that promise. Maybe a recent petition signed by nearly a million Canadians that she finally does what she promised will do the trick.

My father was a very gentle man whose love for me I never doubted, even when he put me across his knee and let me now in no uncertain terms that what I had done was wrong and deserved punishment. It happened maybe half a dozen times, but it made an impression on me.

Dr. Spock's recipe hasn't worked very well. Isn't it time we go back to some of the tried and proven ideas of the past?

Family is now frozen in time

ONCE KIDS grow up and leave home, gathering everyone together for a family photo often requires a special occasion such as a wedding, a reunion, or a funeral. Last week, when opportunity arose, I surprised everyone by hiring a professional photographer on six hours' notice.

The infrequency of our get-togethers made me reject excusing anyone from the agony of posing to photograph the rest of us. My aim was an informal family portrait, everyone present, worthy of an 8x10 frame.

Had I asked who was willing to take part, all would have refused. As it was, I heard the usual complaints: I don't like having my picture taken. I always look terrible. And from one who primps passing a glass oven door, a black TV monitor, or a shiny hubcap, a theatrical hand to the forehead and a fake faint.

THROUGH BIFOCALS

We were scheduled to gather for supper at 5. "Wear what you wish, just be there," I said in my best Fonzie voice. "Those who don't pose, don't eat." Being matriarch of this octet carries some weight, I figured.

Promptly at 4, the photographer arrived equipped only with a hand help digital camera. With a sweeping glance, he sized up our lot for potential backdrops.

He chose a broad pine whose thick branches swoop to meet the grass. Hoisting a wooden box eighteen inches square that I use in scaffolding, he loped across the untrimmed lawn, calling orders over his shoulder.

Both sons-in-law each snatched up another wooden cube and followed him. They lined the three boxes in a row before the pine. We took our places, four sitting, four standing.

The digital camera let the photographer see what the picture would be. With little jokes, he cajoled us to relax, to lean closer together, to look at him not a birch, and to smile.

Usually I worry who will be caught with her eyes shut, whose face will be blocked off by someone's elbow, who will be scrubbing and itchy nose with a fist. Not this time.

Despite two moves for different backgrounds, the whole shoot lasted only 10 minutes.

Told one couple would be leaving early the next morning, the photographer rushed the proofs to us before we finished dessert. Everyone had a chance to vote for a favourite. How often does that happen?

We agreed one pose was the best of everyone. How often does that happen?

Oh, our selected pose has a couple of flaws. A mother's hand resting on her daughter's shoulder sprouts from the left side of her sister's head like a flipper. And a jacket zipper zigzags in a long, distracting silver line.

But we're all relaxed, smiling, and present.

Air Show 2000

Pilots roar and soar in the mountains

THERE WAS THUNDER. And there was rain. But despite the moist weather, the air show went on at the airport Sunday, July 23, giving the thousands present plenty to cheer about. Overcast skies actually made it easier to view some of the aerobatics. Clockwise, from top left: CF-18 pilot Capt. Scott "Frog" Greenough climbs down from his jet after performing a series of aerobatic manoeuvres; three-year-old Hannah Kirk was one of the spectators who had to shield her ears as a CF-18 fighter jet roared by; parachutists from a Buffalo search and rescue aircraft dropped in to say hello; the Snowbirds gave a dazzling 30th anniversary performance; Captains Jay "Dallas" Steele and John "Streak" Waugh recline on the wing of their T-33 Shooting Star jet.

He savours the rush of riding the sky

THIS IS where Matt Barlee wants to be.

About 100 feet off the ocean, flying at about 300 knots an hour at his console in a long-range patrol aircraft, tracking a submarine below the surface.

"When the aircraft is shaking, going up and down, you don't need to pay me to do that. It's a rush," says Barlee, a captain in the Canadian air force.

Barlee is a tactical coordinator on an Aurora long-range maritime patrol aircraft based at Comox on Vancouver Island.

He's the quarterback, drawing together all of the information provided by a variety of electronic and other sensors on board the Aurora.

There are five Auroras at Comox, 18 altogether in the air force, and they are the country's only long-range maritime patrol aircraft.

Built to track submarines during the Cold War, the Auroras now perform search and rescue duties, track illegal fishing activity far offshore, check for pollution, do sovereignty patrols and assist the RCMP in anti-drug smuggling operations.

Last year, and again this year, the Auroras also look for migrant smuggling vessels.

Their sensors, hi-tech cameras and powerful searchlights make them the ideal aircraft for such an activity.

Just 31 years old, Bar-lee has been in the air force for more than 12 years.

He was one of several Canadian Forces officers on hand two weekends ago at the Terrace-Kilmat airshow, to give information on the forces.

Born in Richmond and raised in the Okanagan, Barlee has a degree in physics and oceanography.

"I have the best job in the world," he says. "They paid me to go to university and now they pay me to go all over the world."

"The armed forces is for people who like adventure and travel, a challenge." "You'll have the opportunity to go places and do all sorts of adventurous things you don't have a chance to do in civilian life."

Barlee decided upon an armed forces career after graduating from high school as the way to fulfil his prime desire of flying.

His one piece of solid advice for young people considering a career in the armed forces is to first stay in high school and get good marks.

That's important for the armed forces relies on specialized equipment and needs well-trained people to accomplish its tasks.

For the past several years, Barlee has been stationed at Esquimalt, where he co-ordinates the various aircraft in the air force on the west coast.

They're all based at Comox and include the Aurora, the Sea King helicopters based on naval frigates and jets used in combat training exercises.

Comox is also the home of the search and rescue squadron flying Labrador helicopters and Buffalo fixed-wing aircraft.

Barlee's career has also taken him to places outside of his tactical training.

In 1995 he was selected as the team leader to climb Gascherbrum, the eighth-highest mountain in the world in the Himalayas.

At a camp at 24,000 feet and with the summit in reach, one of the team developed altitude sickness.

"It was a life-threatening situation," recalls Barlee. "He would have died within four or five hours."

Although there was a vicious storm outside, Barlee carried the team member back down the mountain.

For that action, Barlee received the forces Meritorious Service Medal.

Barlee never did reach the summit. "It'll always be there," he says.

Barlee has one more year in Esquimalt and will return to the Auroras at Comox, adding to the 2,000-plus hours he has spent in the aircraft.

Letters to the editor

Keep these Issues private

Dear Sir:

There is a major fallacy in your argument in your July 26 editorial. You state that members of city council who oppose the proclamation of a gay pride day should not have done so on the basis that they are mixing church and state by upholding their 'religious beliefs' in a public forum.

You also argue that they should take a stance against Sunday shopping, ban explicit videos, ban the sale of tobacco and so on. I suppose your assumption is that all these 'vices' you mentioned are ones that only people of religious persuasion, and Christians specifically, are opposed to. This is simply not the case.

Pushing aside the Biblical arguments against destructive behaviour for a minute, may I point out that many thousands of people in our city do not drink excessively, or smoke tobacco, or watch sexually explicit videos, not because of religious beliefs, but because such activities disgust them.

Besides, just because something such as tobacco or pornography is legal, does not mean it is right. There is a huge difference between banning an activity or substance, and simply refraining from endorsing it. This is a simple fact often overlooked by the media.

No one is suggesting that homosexuality be banned; that would be like trying to force people to approve homosexuality. If, for example, the liquor control board asked city council to proclaim a 'Get Flaming Drunk and Beat Your Spouse Pride Day', do you think it would be appropriate for them to do so? Or, how about a 'Marital Aid Users Pride Day'? Sounds pretty silly, doesn't it?

The whole point of the city issuing proclamations is to promote community spirit. Of course everyone is happy to support Scouts, or victims of MS, spousal assault, cancer, or AIDS. If the neo-nazis in our community asked for a proclamation of 'White Pride Day', would we expect our councillors to approve it?

Not on your life, but why not? Because they are simply the wrong ideals for our society to be endorsing. For that matter, it would be equally wrong for our council to issue a 'Heterosexual Pride Day'. Sex, no matter what variety, belongs in private. That is why we have public nudity laws. That is why it is illegal to have sex downtown in broad daylight, or on an airplane.

No one should be saying sex is evil, but the entire community does not need to know about what goes on in its bedrooms each night. I do not need my very young children asking me, "Daddy, what is a lesbian?"

As a note to the so-called tolerance committee, I would say that it is sad that you have allowed your sexuality to define your person. One's sexual inclinations do not make you the person you are, any more than the colour of your eyes, or your career, or what brand of breakfast cereal you eat does. Who you are is defined by your heart. If you need municipal proclamations to feel good about your choices, you are very pathetic indeed.

You cannot proclaim or legislate tolerance, acceptance, or approval. You may make a point by punishing the city for its refusal to endorse your lifestyle, but it will only serve to hinder your struggle.

It will make you a joke; and it's highly unlikely that very many closet homosexuals will be convinced to come out into such an environment.

To the Christians of Terrace, "Let him who is without sin throw the first stone." Who of us has not violated at least one of God's commands? I dare anyone to tell me why homosexuals are worthy of any more virulent disapproval than the guy who cheats on his taxes, or lies on his time sheets. It is time to stop throwing Scriptures at our neighbours, and love them instead.

Dear Sir:

I've been biting my tongue over the articles, commentaries, and rebuttals regarding the detox centre on Halliwell.

Where in this world can you purchase property for a home or business and dictate who your neighbours are or what they do?

Early comments from the protest group reeked highly of "not in neighborhood" and then their focus moved to "what's best for the clients." Obviously, heavy research was involved in gathering statistics and finding a more acceptable angle for their protest.

Terrace has kids who are reaching out and we have the staff and facility to help them.

We're not rich city snobs and we're not third world. Most of us live here because Terrace offers the best of both worlds.

We have a safe and caring community where we can raise our families and know & enjoy our neighbors. We help all causes great & small, we feed our poor and revel in the glory of our accomplishments made possible by virtue of our small town structure.

We have a need here. Unlike the skate park, funding is not an issue. And unlike the second sheet of ice, this is not a taxpayer issue. The detox center is an approved and needed facility which will benefit our community.

The anti detox group is snuffing out an asset that most communities our size can only dream of.

Please re-think the message you are sending. Don't make us vote you off our small town island.

BUSINESS REVIEW

Regional plan signed to draw movie makers

WHEN movie moguls think about filming in northwestern B.C., the Prince George Film Commission is now officially their first stop.

Terrace, Kitimat, Prince Rupert and the Kitimat-Stikine regional district last week signed an agreement with the commission to make it the prime marketing gateway for locations in this area.

Towns in this area tie into it through local contacts and extensive books of information and local location photos.

Under the agreement, this region contributes a total of $10,000 to the Prince George Film Commission, with a $2,500 Terrace share of that coming from the Terrace Economic Development Authority.

It's well worthwhile, said authority executive director Ken Veldman, because it allows Terrace and the region to tap into the expertise the Prince George commission has developed over the past three years.

"It allows us to go from basically standing still to full speed in a matter of months when otherwise it would have taken us years," he said.

Prince George Film Commission director Sara Shaak said the film industry wants to go through one central contact point for the north, but the commission needed to be able to offer locations that Prince George alone didn't have.

The arrangement has already been going on informally for several months and works well, says Veldman.

The Prince George commission refers to the Terrace authority requests for locations that could fit this area.

The local office has put Terrace area location photo files into the hands of location decision makers for around 15 to 20 locations in that time.

"We've ended up on short lists for several of them either directly in Terrace or in the general region," Veldman added. "We remain on several short lists at the moment where either a decision not yet been made or a project is in hiatus."

SARA SHAAK, of the Prince George Film Commission, and the Terrace Economic Development Authority's Ken Veldman signed an agreement that adds the northwest to the commission's coverage area.

Even though Terrace hasn't landed any big movie so far, the simple experience of responding professionally to requests is valuable, he said.

"We've been able to gain some credibility in the industry in terms of being able to respond correctly and give them the kind of information they're looking for," he said. "Even if they do not go with us on that project they can get an idea of what kind of geography and settings are available in the region."

"And when the right

script does come along we've got that much more of a leg up."

The next regions expected to join under the same model are the Cariboo and northeast.

The model being used to market northwest B.C. is innovative enough that it's gotten mention in Hollywood trade magazines and Veldman and Shaak are being asked to give presentations in other regions of B.C.

"As simple as it is it's obviously something that isn't being done regularly," he said.

Libs appealing Nisga'a ruling

By JEFF NAGEL
THE B.C. LIBERAL party is appealing a court ruling last week that dismissed their challenge of the Nisga'a treaty.

The decision, handed down July 24 by B.C. Supreme Court Justice L. Paul Williamson, rejected the key argument of party leader Gordon Campbell and two other MLAs that treaty self-government provisions are unconstitutional because they would create a third order of government.

B.C. Liberal aboriginal affairs critic Mike de Jong said the ruling opens the door for many other native groups to also seek self-government powers.

"This decision as it stands will have a fairly profound impact in terms of self-government around the country," he predicted.

Williamson, in his ruling, rejected a key premise of the court challenge: that all legislative power was divided between the federal government and the provinces at the time of Confederation.

That, the Liberals had argued, extinguished in 1867 any self-government powers natives wielded prior to then.

Therefore, they said, the law-making authority of Nisga'a government can't supercede federal or provincial powers, and the parts of the treaty that do that must be struck down.

"Although the right of aboriginal people to govern themselves was diminished, it was not extinguished," Williamson ruled.

One example, he said in his written judgement, of powers aboriginal governments have continued to hold and exercise is the power to make treaties binding on their people.

The Liberals had cited the B.C. Court of Appeal ruling in the Delgamuukw Gitksan land claim case that "the division of governmental powers between Canada and the provinces left no room for a third order of government."

Williamson, however, said the Supreme Court of Canada's decision to order a retrial in that case "indicates they disagreed with that conclusion."

In response to complaints the treaty will deny non-natives voting rights, Williamson said that's not unusual.

"Provinces have residency requirements and citizens who move from one province to another may find there is a waiting period during which they may not vote," he stated.

"Citizens are subject to the laws of regional districts, municipalities, and various administrative boards, the regulations or by-laws of which have the force of law, yet frequently they are not eligible to vote in elections for such bodies, the members of many such agencies being appointed or the right to vote in elections for such bodies being restricted."

"It is worthwhile noting that while the Treaty ensures that certain people are guaranteed Nisga'a citizenship, it also permits the Nisga'a government to grant such citizenship to other persons," he said.

He also noted many powers conferred to the Nisga'a by the treaty are severely limited. In some cases in a conflict federal or provincial laws override Nisga'a laws. In other cases Nisga'a-created standards must meet or exceed federal and provincial standards.

"The legislative powers of the Nisga'a Government are significantly limited by the Treaty," he said.

B.C. aboriginal affairs minister Dale Lovick called the decision confirmation the treaty is valid, and denounced the opposition plan to appeal it further.

Health body waits for budget

PLANS TO improve health care services here are on hold because the Terrace and Area Community Health Council has no idea how much money it has to spend.

Although the new fiscal year began April 1, the provincial government has yet to approve budgets here or for any of the other 51 regional or community health authorities across the province.

Instead, health authorities have been told to keep services at the level of last year for the time being.

While it's not unusual for public sector bodies to not have final budgets in hand when their new fiscal years begin, three and a half months have passed since the new fiscal year started.

"From all appearances, we may not know until late fall," said community health council chief executive officer Dieter Kuntz last week.

On hold here is a list of budget requests which include hiring more nurses at Mills Memorial Hospital for its main ward and intensive care unit.

Nursing shortages last year resulted in admittance restrictions, drawing criticisms from local health care advocates.

Also wanted is more money for the ophthalmology program. The provincial government hasn't increased its contribution for this service since 1994 and Mills has had to divert monies to keep up with expenses.

Kuntz said the lack of a budget is a challenge.

"We have a budget document here ready to send down but we haven't been asked to do that yet," he said.

As things stand now, the health council is running a monthly deficit.

That's because while it is operating using last year's budget figures, it has had labour, supplies and other cost increases to pay for since the new budget year began.

Meanwhile, a health ministry official says it is working diligently on figuring out how much health care authorities will have to spend this year.

"There is no time line [to release budget figures] but we do realize the delay is causing some problems for health care authorities," said Nadine Criddle.

Last year, the local health council received its final budget in mid-May.

Criddle did say the health ministry has provided some extra monies for wage increases in advance of knowing final budget figures.

Kuntz speculates the delay may be caused by negotiations between the federal and provincial governments for more money.

Since the mid-1990s, cuts in federal health transfer payments to the provinces have resulted in severe budget squeezes.

But improvements in federal finances now raise the possibility of increased payments to the provinces which will then be parcelled out to hospitals and other facilities.

The health ministry's Criddle did acknowledge that one reason for the budget delay comes from a one-time cash payment made by the federal government to B.C. for the current budget year.

"There are still discussions underway as to how some of the money is to be utilized," she said.

As well, a new round of talks are now underway between Ottawa and the provinces which could result in an additional amount of money this year.

IWA likes contract

MEMBERS OF the IWA have voted in great numbers to accept a three-year contract giving them raises of two per cent in each of those years.

The contract was reached after a nine-day strike which shut down sawmills the end of June and beginning of July.

The acceptance rate was 83.6 per cent among coastal workers, which includes northwest IWA members.

There are more than 30,000 IWA workers in B.C.

MAJOR AMENDMENT #1

Ministry of Forests

SPRING CREEK AND DEEP CREEK COMMUNITY WATERSHEDS

Notice is hereby given that the Small Business Forest Enterprise Program will hold a public viewing of a proposed Major Amendment to the Forest Development Plan for the Kalum District. This amendment covers operations in the Spring Creek and Deep Creek Community Watersheds, and operations adjacent to Spring Creek Community Watershed. This amendment is to allow for the salvage of timber that was damaged by a windstorm in July 20, 1999.

This draft Forest Development Plan amendment shows the location and development of proposed harvesting and road development that is planned to occur over the next year. The amendment also includes information on the maintenance and protection of other resource values in the area. It is available for review by resource agencies and the public before joint approval is considered by the Ministry of Environment, Lands and Parks, and the Ministry of Forests.

The purpose of presenting the plan, is to provide the opportunity to address any concerns of the public or other resource users. The Forest Development Plan Amendment will be available for review at the dates, times and locations listed below:

A summer place

The first time I saw what was to become our family's summer cottage I was seven years old. My parents loaded up their three children and drove the two hours that took us from a dry flat wheat-beige prairie to rocky hilly pine-green lakes.

Our cabin was at Block 6 of Big Whiteshell Lake, and it is a big lake. In fact, it was the largest body of water I had ever seen in my whole life.

We followed a trail through the bush from the backyard of the cottage up up up to a high sheer bluff and into the fury of an early spring squall. The wind tore at us as the massive expanse of angry grey water swirled into whitecaps. Oh, I was scared.

The most water I had seen before that day were the overflowing ditches after the snow melted. And one spring the park near our house in town had been flooded by runoff from the creek, and the resulting puddle was so deep it nearly came to the very tip-top of my rubber boots.

And the nearby Red River Floodway was good for sledding down into in winter. In summer it was dry or had a tiny trickle of water, barely enough to hatch a mosquito.

The cabin at Big Whiteshell, a one-storey knotty-pine shell filled with strange furnishings and crazy little knickknacks, cost the astronomical sum of $5,500 - but my parents bought it anyway.

Included at no extra cost were some extremely valuable treasures, but we didn't find them until our first summer weekend there.

Along with the rough crates used as bedside tables, curtains for doors, sagging chairs, outhouse-joke figurines and wacky varnished plaques proclaiming implausible platitudes were two large treasure chests.

Well, actually they were wooden footlockers, two feet high, four feet wide with hinged lids and painted light grey. They were both so heavy they could not be moved.

One was filled to the brim with hundreds of new big black garbage bags, still folded, tightly packed. My mom's eyes went big "Wow!" she said. She didn't need to buy a plastic garbage bag for the cottage, or for our house in town, for years and years.

Also worth their weight in gold were the contents of the second chest - similarly chock-full of a dear commodity, neatly stacked and filled to the top with: comic books! Not just Superman and Batman and The Fabulous Four (although there were plenty of those) but also Archie and Richie Rich and Little Lulu and Casper the Friendly Ghost.

Listen, it was worth it to walk the mile to the store in the hot sun for a cream soda and sunflower seeds to later enjoy with a selection of comics on the front porch. Nothing could be finer. Pure bliss it was and a relaxing interlude in the hectic life of an eight year old or twelve year old.

When I wasn't studying the graphic novel genre, I could be found playing nicely with my little sister. Our mother allowed us to paint the outhouse (inside or out) every summer, as many times as we deemed necessary.

The smell of Lysol, latex paint, and, ah, the odour of the pit is a combination hard to beat, in my mind, for pure nostalgic value.

In spring or fall (as my parents had been busy winterizing the place) my sister and I played with sticks. The sandy road in front of the cottage sloped gently to the lake, and when it rained, truly astounding waterways could be meticulously constructed. We used sticks to dig out new oxbows, to shore up faltering waterfalls and to test the speed of fast-flowing major tributaries.

My big brother would be out on the lake fishing, or in winter, snowmobiling.

On Christmas Day we liked to barbecue the turkey with an electric rotisserie on the front porch. One year the turkey's skin got burnt and then the blackened bird flew out of my dad's hands and bounced off the porch railing to roll around in the snow. That one was the best-tasting ever, though we found it difficult to replicate the recipe.

When I think of our summer place I long for a languid afternoon of comics, cream soda and kanak-zote, but it isn't summer memories keeping that place in my heart.

Instead, it's the December with a blackened turkey tumbling in fresh white snow, a family comedy, or the majestic terror of that first raw April day looking with wonder upon the biggest body of water I had ever seen.

Babies need to be immunised

Whooping cough hits northwest

HEALTH OFFICIALS are urging parents to have their infants immunised after a recent surge in whooping cough struck the region.

The disease, which can be fatal to infants reached its highest figure in four years with 20 confirmed cases in the northwest since May, three of which left children in intensive care.

"It can have very serious, life long consequences for infants," said Assistant Administrator of Public Health Nursing Margaret McKelvie. "We are encouraging people to have infants immunised."

The immunisation process, which can be completed anytime before a child is seven, involves a series of five shots taken throughout their development.

McKelvie said of the 85% of parents who have their child immunised many never complete the process, leaving their children at risk.

"There is a significant number of children whose immunisation is incomplete," she said, adding that the shots are government funded and can be completed at any health unit in the province.

McKelvie also urged parents to be cautious of their children in public places such as supermarkets and malls where the disease spreads rapidly. "Try to keep your babies away from coughing adults," she suggested.

Although adults do contract the disease its effects are not as serious as in children and usually result in a bad cough or nausea.

But with whooping cough rampant in the Terrace area, McKelvie asks those with symptoms for more than a week to visit their doctor.

"People with a prolonged cough should visit a doctor," she said.

But since the effects of whooping cough are similar to a bad cold or flu, McKelvie said many of those infected are reluctant to visit a physician - helping to spread the disease to other people in the region.

Another reason for its prevalence is that the virus can transform rapidly, making it difficult to vaccinate against.

LITTLE Kylee Lindstrom gets her first immunisation shot against whooping cough by local public health nurse, Ann-Marie Conway (left). Because of their still-developing immune systems, babies are easy targets for the virus.

ED CURELL, head librarian at the Terrace Public Library is checking his computer for overdue books. To help get those items back, the library is sending a collection agency after borrowers.

Library enlists collection agency

YOU PAY all your bills. You always cover your parking tickets, and you've never missed a credit card payment. So what could a collection agency possibly want with you?

An overdue library book - that's what they're after.

The Terrace Public Library hired a collection agency two years ago to do its dirty work - collecting over due books and fines.

Ed Curell, head librarian, says the library is owed about $80,000 in fines and books, videos and tapes that were never returned.

"We're losing several hundreds of dollars a year," Curell said.

He added: "The cost of books is going up, most books cost anywhere from $30 to $50. I can just see this problem is just going to escalate."

Curell explained one resident owes the library $644, for the 30 books he borrowed in 1999.

We just want the books back, Curell said.

He said the collection agency has helped recover about 25 per cent of the library's missing stock.

People who return their missing books, videos or tapes, will be credited for however much the book is worth.

The library has been using the collection agency for about three years.

Drive to feed hungry aims to fill shelves

A LOCAL business is challenging other businesses to help feed Terrace's needy families.

After reading about the Salvation Army's food bank food shortage in last week's Terrace Standard Pacific Northern Gas (PNG) organised a food drive to help feed restock the empty shelves at the bank.

"We hope to get as much participation from other businesses as possible," said Cindy Brown, a PNG employee who helped spearhead the drive.

Help the Hungry week will run until August 4.

Brown says that other businesses have already come forward with food donations.

"There are about 400 members of the Chamber of Commerce in town," said Brown. "That means that if each member donated 10 items we'd have 4,000 items in the bank - that would feed a lot of people."

Another coordinator of the food drive, PNG employee, Laura Lanterman will be keeping a running tally of business donations during the week.

"There is no prize at the end," said Brown. "Just that gratifying feeling we all get when we do something good for someone else."

Brown had first planned to restrict the drive to other PNG employees, but after speaking with Lanterman decided the drive would be more successful if other businesses were involved.

Telemedia's AM radio station, the New Mix 590 is donating air time to the drive and will be randomly calling local businesses to see how many donations they've collected.

Saint John's Wort

A perennial plant with cheery yellow flowers, Saint John's Wort is currently heralded as an herb with applications for depression.

However up-to-date the news may seem, this herb has been used for centuries. Stories tell us that during the Crusades St. John of Jerusalem favoured it for cleaning and healing terrible battle wounds. Apparently it worked so well, legends were built about it. Culpepper referred to it in his 1649 book, The Complete Herbal, as an antidote to poisons, venoms and infections, worms, for injuries, bruises, open obstructions, scalds, and to dissolve swellings.

More recently, research published in 1988 shows that St. John's Wort has diuretic properties, strengthens the capillaries, dilates coronary arteries, prevents tumors, battles diarrhea and viruses, and destroys germs. Anti-fungal properties have been found.

Investigation is ongoing to examine the herb's application in HIV treatment, as studies show it inhibits the activity of that virus. This could be great for the immune system.

Traditionally, St. John's Wort was used for lung conditions, nervous conditions, neuralgia, anxiety and tension. It has also been indicated for pain relief, to reduce swelling, for abscesses, insect bites, and for rheumatism. It's served for afterbirth pain, bed wetting (suppression), boils, cancer and tumors, Chronic Fatigue Syndrome, depression, dysentery, gallbladder, gout, headaches, internal bleeding, jaundice, menopause, mental burnout, palsy and spasms, a wide array of sleep disorders, ulcers and ulnar problems. That's a lot of uses!

Nutritional content of this herb include bioflavonoids, including rutin and quercetin.

THE QUESTION: St. John's Wort has myriad potential applications. A very safe herb, the same compounds that make it beneficial in many ways also induce photosensitivity in animals. Fair-skinned people using it may sunburn more easily. We should be cautious about protecting ourselves from strong sunlight at any time.

Picture-perfect wedding sends couple on way

I HAD the great privilege of attending a beautiful morning wedding.

With Pastor Mark Aselstine officiating Chad Taylor, son of Phil and Wendy Freischer married his beautiful bride, Dawn Thiessen daughter of Ken and Sherry Thiessen on Saturday morning, May 20, 2000 at 11 am at the Terrace Alliance Church.

The lovely bride entered the beautifully decorated church at her father's arm.

She was very beautiful in her long, white satin gown with a hand-beaded pearl and lace jacket. In her hair she wore a wreath-like headpiece covered with studded pearls and her veil was delicately edged with white ribbon.

For her jewellery, she wore a necklace of pearls with rhinestones and matching earrings and for her bridal bouquet she carried a beautiful arrangement - hot pink Orlando roses, white hydrangeas and Casablanca lilies with some ivy.

I must say Dawn looked lovely and very happy.

The handsome groom was dressed in a black tuxedo, a white shirt and a black necktie. His boutonniere was a pink coloured rose with Stephanotis. Of course he too looked very happy, but somewhat nervous.

Maids of Honour were Jill Thiessen, sister of the bride and Amber Barsch, cousin of the bride. The bridesmaids Maiya Davis and Jonessa Beintema were both friends of the bride. All were dressed in long, sleeveless, empire waist dark green satin gowns and for their bouquets they carried a smaller version of the bride's bouquet.

Best man was Travis Taylor, brother of the groom and the groomsmen were Eric Thiessen, brother of the bride, Lars Granberg and Iannick Mathieu, both friends of the groom. All wore black tuxedos, white shirts and black neckties, which matched the groom.

The little ring bearer, Shay Freischer was a brother of the groom. He wore a white shirt and a green vest matching the bridesmaids own dresses. The beautiful little flower girl was Madison Mallette, a friend of the bride. She wore a dark green dress that matched the bridesmaids dresses.

During the wedding ceremony there was a very touching moment when the lovely bride sang to her new husband the song, I will be here, by Steven Curtis Chapman. This brought many tears to everyone in the church, including the groom.

HERE 'N THERE

Others taking part in the wedding ceremony were the candle lighters, Kendra McKinnon and Jocelyn Johnson, ushers Stan Giesbrecht, Jeff Thiessen, Josh Sampson and Aaron Tripson. The guest book attendant was Caitlyn Sampson, cousin of the groom.

The musicians were Tim Barsch, who played piano and vocals and Murray Barsch, who played baritone and vocals. Tim and Murray played a special song for Dawn as she entered the church, Jesu Joy of Man's Desiring.

The song was chosen by Dawn because it was the same song that her mother had walked down the aisle to on her wedding day 25 years ago.

After the morning ceremony the wedding party gathered at the Falls Gallery for pictures. The pictures were taken by Wendy Shymanski and Rod Gee of Wildlight Photography. The flowers were by Central Flowers.

Later in the afternoon at 4 pm a reception was held at the Terrace Alliance Church. There were lots of speeches and toasts done and a slide show by Je-throw and Roberta Taylor showing pictures of Dawn and Chad at different stages of their lives.

I must mention that Heidi Davis made Dawn's beautiful wedding gown and the lovely decorated wedding cake. She also made her daughter, Maiya Davis' bridesmaid dress.

The other dresses were made by family or friends.

And now, to Dawn and Chad: thank you for the invitation. It was a pleasure to be included in your special day. I would like to wish you both much happiness and good health in your new married life together. God bless you both.

LOCAL COUPLE Dawn Thiessen and Chad Taylor exchanged vows in a morning wedding, May 20.

Park Report by Bryn White

Lakelse Lake Provincial Park represents a significant wetland habitat as lakeshore, pond, stream and riparian areas. One does not have to spend too long in the park to see living things that depend on healthy wetlands. Osprey, grebes, loons, kingfishers, beaver, dragonflies, juvenile salmon, skunk cabbage and many more species rely on our park's wetland systems.

Aside from these larger, more visible living things is a family of creatures that, due to their elusive and private nature are often forgotten unless you are peering underneath logs, or broad skunk cabbage leaves for them. Amphibians; frogs, toads, salamanders and newts are literally living a "double life" as they need both land and water for their well being. Mostly found in moist, dark places in or near the ponds and riparian areas, amphibians have an important place in the environment, and in the park. Because of their unique bodies and their specific requirements for habitat, amphibians are a useful means of measuring environmental health. Growing concern for the seemingly unexplained decreasing numbers of amphibians in many parts of the world have sparked a global monitoring effort.

The amphibians at Lakelse Lake Provincial Park are part of this worldwide scientific study and in addition to the initial inventory, ongoing observations continue to contribute to a broader understanding of amphibians and their habitat. What is known is that the park contains a wide variety of amphibian habitats that support western toads, north western salamanders, long toed salamanders, rough-skinned newts, spotted frogs and wood frogs. You can do your part to allow frogs, toads, salamanders and newts in the park to continue their important role in the natural environment as well as support their contributions to science by leaving them, and their egg cases undisturbed.

RESIDENTIAL GARBAGE COLLECTION

- Residential garbage must be at curbside by 7:00 a.m. during the summer months. Collection times can change without notice, and our operators are not able to "go back" to pick up containers that are put out late.
- There is concern with animals getting into garbage bags. Use of a covered can reduces the litter.
- There is a two (2) can or bag limit per household per collection day. Cans hold more refuse than bags.
- Additional cans or bags must have a City of Terrace GARBAGE TAG visible and securely attached to be collected. These tags are $1.00 each, and are available at City Hall, Public Works, and the Aquatic Center.
- Only compost is picked up on Mondays; refer to the schedule for your days. We request that compost be placed in see-through plastic bags.

YOU BE THE JUDGE

Let Me On That Plane!

BY CLAIRE BERNSTEIN

BASED ON ACTUAL COURT CASES

"Okay, everyone, time for a body check." Jennifer yelled out over the noise and confusion of the busy airport. "Let's see, 4 pieces of luggage, 3 adorable children..."

"Aw Mom!"

"...two carry-on bags, and...one...one what?"

"One daddy."

"Right, one daddy. Hey, where is your father?"

"He's over there fighting with that lady."

Jennifer and the kids rushed over to Craig who was at the ticket counter screaming and waving his arms.

"YOU'RE NUTS, LADY. WHERE'S THE MANAGER? I'M NEVER FLYING WITH YOU AGAIN."

"Easy, Craig," Jennifer calmly interjected. "We're on holiday, what could be worth all this yelling?"

"They're not letting me on the plane."

"WHAT?!" Jennifer exploded. "WE'VE GOT TICKETS! WE'VE GOT RIGHTS! DO YOU SEE HOW PALE MY SKIN IS? I NEED THE SUN. GET US TO FLORIDA, LADY! NOW!"

The clerk was unfazed. "You are a little pasty looking. But what you really need are anger management courses. Let me reiterate our policy. You need a passport or a birth certificate to fly to the States. You and your kids have what you need, so have a good trip. But your husband has no such documents. He's going nowhere. Next!"

Jennifer balked. "I'm not flying without my husband."

Craig pounded on the desk. "But I've never needed a passport to fly to the States!"

"Sorry. Company policy."

Jennifer begged. "Please, ticket lady, can't you just speak to that nice customs officer over there. I'm sure he'll let us on."

"Sorry."

"Mom! I gotta pee."

Jennifer frantically mobilized everyone. "Craig...you take Joey to the bathroom, then head over to the airlines down the hall. Billy, you take the airlines over there. I'll search on the other side. Suzie, you handle the airlines around here. Your mission: 5 tickets to Florida."

"But Mom," Suzie's voice squeaked. "I'm only 4 years old. I don't know how to buy airplane tickets."

"Good point, Suzie. You're coming with me. Move it out, troops."

The family found another flight. But there was much whining.

"It only leaves in 9 hours!"

"But it arrives in Miami, not Tampa!"

"Which means a long car ride. Gross!"

The family finally got to their seaside hotel almost a day late. Frazzled and cranky, there was only one thing to say. "We're suing the airline!"

In court, Craig tried not to yell. "Your Honour, I travel three or four times a year to the States, I've never needed my passport. The airline had no right to refuse me on the plane."

Awsome Air argued back. "Your Honour, it's our policy to insist on a birth certificate or a valid passport to fly to the States. This policy was known to the industry."

Should Awsome Air have let Craig in the plane? You Be The Judge! Then look below for the decision.

YOU! BE THE JUDGE - DECISION

"Craig wins!" decided Judge Theresa. "The requirements imposed by Awsome Air aren't mandatory and are not the policy of U.S. immigration. Plus, it doesn't say anywhere in their material that a passport or birth certificate must be produced in order to board the flight." Today's column is based on a case from Ontario. ## Tour glimpses local water wonderlands

MEANDER THROUGH the lush backyard oases created and cared for by local residents in the Ksan House-Society's first annual pond tour, August 5.

The tour, part of the Riverboat Days festivities takes garden enthusiasts - and those just curious - on a self-guided walk of local ponds and water gardens.

"We wanted to try something different and new," said Irlanda Price, pond tour organizer.

She explains that tour-goers will see exotic lilies, unusual fish and tropical plants while being able to chat with the creators of these wet treasures.

"Learn special tips from those who have succeeded in this very difficult and rewarding climate," reads a pamphlet on the pond tour. "Local expertise is incredibly valuable."

From formal water gardens flowing with fountains and falls to ponds in barrels the tour offers something for everyone.

The tour runs from 10 am to 4 pm on Saturday.

Tickets are $10 and available at the Ksan House-Society.

Oil woes part three

Last week I wrote of how industrial development had compromised the environment and, as a result, the resplendent fishing that was once to be had in Burrard Inlet. This week I discuss this issue in greater depth.

The wretched state of a large part of Burrard Inlet isn't due to oil pollution alone. I don't even know if the excrement from the oil refineries and ships are the largest source of marine pollution there. Even when we were kids, condoms floated around in the water like jellyfish, suggesting that sewage was probably a large polluter.

Still, the fate and state of Burrard Inlet can help us appreciate the beating we're inflicting on the seas, or as scientists like to say, the anthropogenic impact on the hydrosphere. What happened there can also give us a feel for the variety and complexity of the problems flowing from marine pollution.

First, we need to realize that the ecological riches of the sea are not evenly distributed. The continental shelves, are to the sea what littoral zones are to lakes. They are edges, the places where life is generated and concentrated, and therefore, the places where natural resources are abundant and most easily exploited.

This zone and the narrow strip of land adjoining it have been the focus of activities that have, to a large extent, ensured the emergence and progress of the world's economy and, in a broader context, the origin and development of civilization itself. This is the reason that 80% of the Earth's population and 50% of all large cities are located in the coastal area.

Pollution is the leading factor when it comes to hardships man inflicts upon the sea, but it's not the only one and it can only be fully assessed within the framework of all other impacts of human activity on the hydrosphere.

Underestimating the striking complexity of man's impact on the water ecosystems by focusing on some single aspect of human activity leads to a distorted picture of the consequences of that activity. It's necessary to consider how the simultaneous impacts of several factors can create a situation where their consequences can exceed the effects caused by each factor separately.

In Burrard Inlet there is oil, there is sewage, there is a thermal plant, as well as many other industries. There are also railroads, piers, warehouses and other structures that have claimed large tracts of, and impacted upon, the marine habitat.

We need to examine the impacts on the hydrosphere in a holistic way. After doing this, we have to appreciate that the effects of these activities is greater along the shelf zone and greatest in the bays and in a sheltered coastal area, like Burrard Inlet.

At present, the anthropogenic disturbances of the shelf zone are found on a global scale. In many areas they have reached critical limits. This is the price we are paying for unjustifiably, rapid economic growth and short sighted environmental policy.

The first obvious symptoms of the anthropogenic press on the coastal zone and continental shelf appeared about 50 to 60 years ago. Now, man's impact has become so intense, diverse, and dynamic that the decision makers are finally starting to realize its danger. Offshore oil and gas production is part of this heterogeneous mosaic of human activities presently occurring in the shelf zone.

Clearly the latter activity can't be separated from the rest of the monolithic, corporate driven industry to which it belongs, and whose impact on the biosphere is global.

Oil spills and well blowouts, as devastating as they are, are not the most devastating spinoff of the oil and gas industry. Burrard Inlet has, as far as I can tell, never been a victim of a large oil spill, but has been and is being contaminated by the slow relentless drip of oil, oil byproducts and other pollutants. Crude oil is a shape changer built of a complex suite of chemicals that assaults from all angles and manifests itself to us in all kinds of forms.

The byproducts of exploration—the drilling muds, the drill cuttings, the seismic explorations, the physical impact of fisheries, the vast suite of chemicals and gases released into the environment in the exploratory process have their greatest impact on site and, in many cases, rapidly dissipate (though a significant amount of recent research is disputing widely held notions about the reach of these impacts and suggests there is still not enough research into the question). It is a grave mistake to examine any aspect of the oil industry in isolation.

Man made systems are caricatures of natural systems. We accept that everything in the natural world is interconnected in an infinitely complex fabric whose subtle weave we are just starting to appreciate.

Manmade systems share that same quality of interconnectedness. The oil industry is large, unwieldy and complex, and it is all of a piece. You can no more examine hydrocarbon exploration in Hecate Strait in isolation of the oil industry and all its manifestations, any more than you can try to understand the working of the little finger without knowing anything of the neuromuscular system.

Baseball defeats weather

THE SUN finally shone for Prince George as they defeated Cowichan Valley, and won the Junior Babe Ruth Baseball Championships at Rotary Park on Friday night.

The weather didn't cooperate through most of the tournament — the premier event for boys baseball in B.C. — but that didn't keep fans away from the hard-hitting action on the field.

The bleachers were jammed, especially for Terrace's heart-stopping comeback win over Fraser Valley on Thursday.

The Terrace team got off to a great start, handing Quesnel a 3-2 defeat. Three straight losses to Cowichan Valley, West

Standings Page B12

Kootenay and Prince George though meant that Terrace was forced into a showdown with Fraser Valley for the final playoff spot Thursday.

A win would give them a chance to enter the finals, a loss would mean they'd join Quesnel on the sidelines.

Things looked good for Terrace early, as they got three runs to take the lead, which they held through most of the game. Jordan Cowman, on the mound for his second game, rose to the occasion early, striking out several batters, and getting solid run support.

Terrace's play began to falter in the bottom of the sixth as a series of defensive errors led to four Fraser Valley runs. Terrace was going to have to muster up all their strength to pull this one out. Kyle Carey singled and stole second, and within minutes Terrace was knocking on the door, loading the bases. Carey scored from third on a wild pitch.

With Matt Kelly at the plate, another wild pitch was tossed away, and Cody Latimer crossed home, putting Terrace ahead again, to the honks of car horns and cheers from the rain-soaked bleachers.

Terrace held on in the bottom of the seventh, tightening up defensively and shutting out Fraser Valley. Cowman pitched the complete game.

On Friday, Terrace was in tough against favourite Prince George in the semifinals.

During the round robin, the Prince George team had gone unbeaten in all five games, with an incredible 46 runs scored and only 10 runs against.

Terrace on the other hand scored 12 and gave up 51 runs in five games.

In their only round robin meeting, Prince George shut out Terrace 11-0. The playoff match up wasn't as lopsided, as Terrace managed two runs, in a 12-2 loss.

With the win, Prince George advanced to the finals and Terrace would play for third against West Kootenay, a game they lost.

The finals went Prince George's way as they coasted to a 10-3 victory over Cowichan Valley, becoming Babe Ruth League Champions.

TERRACE'S BRAD Thiessen swings and misses in Babe Ruth Provincials Action last week at Rotary Field. His Terrace team played well enough to earn a playoff berth, but were no match for teams like Prince George. Despite the fourth place finish, local organizers say that future teams can be even more competitive with the right training, coaching programs and league play introduced.

Terrace could have baseball winners soon

THE FUTURE for baseball in Terrace looks bright in the aftermath of the Junior Babe Ruth League Championships for 14 year olds.

Both event organizer Greg Cowman, and Terrace coach Roger Harris agree that with the right type of player development, Terrace could have some contenders down the road.

"There was no expectation of beating Prince George right now," Harris said. "Throwing was one of the big differences that separated the teams."

Harris said that training needs to be available for young players here, but said that the team's fourth place performance at the Babe Ruth provincials is a good sign.

"The fact that we're [at the championships] is a sign that the quality is moving up," he said. "I'd say we're ecstatic with the performance."

Cowman said that both the history of baseball in Prince George and their population base were factors in their championship performance.

Terrace Minor Baseball is looking at adding some more leagues to create more interest and a bigger pool of developing players.

"What we're looking towards developing is a senior level, so that the young people can look up," Cowman said. "But we're really proud of how our boys did."

The players seemed equally satisfied by the team's showing.

"We made history here," said pitcher Kyle Carey. "We won two games."

Soccer volunteers and teams sought

INTERESTED IN playing some soccer over the Labour Day Weekend? How about helping with a fun, action-packed event?

Mui Luc, of Artistic Hair Studio women's soccer team is organizing a tournament here and inviting women's teams from across the province and western Canada to take part.

Cash and prizes will be offered to top teams. It's hoped that this year's tournament will be the start of a major annual event here in Terrace.

Volunteers are needed for the event, and proceeds will go toward women's soccer here, and towards future soccer competition.

All games are slated to be played in Thornhill.

Last year, the tournament drew four teams, but organizers have higher expectations this year.

"It's guaranteed soccer, soccer and more soccer," said Luc.

For more information, or if you're into supporting women's soccer in the northwest on a volunteer basis contact tournament organizer Mui Luc as soon as possible at 638-8928, or fax her at 638-8958.

165 THANKS

Dear Friends of Laura Condon;

It is with love and gratitude that we say thank you for traveling to Prince George to say a last goodbye to your dear, young friend. What a heartwarming presence you were - you truly helped make an unbelievably sad time more bearable for all of us. Knowing Laura had such loyal and caring friends was a great comfort to her family. We would like to have met each of you individually but it wasn't possible in that short time.

We wish you all a long and happy future.

With much Love,
Laura's BJ and GrannyTerrace Sponsors of National Aboriginal Day

The organizing committee for Terrace National Aboriginal Day would like to thank the sponsors for their contribution to First Nations Culture during the Year 2000 National Aboriginal Day Celebrations in Terrace.

YOU CAN MAKE THIS & WE CAN HELP YOU!

The heat that builds up in your attic during warm weather makes it more difficult and expensive to cool your home. A cupola helps to reduce heat load by natural convection and will add architectural interest to your home or garage. Cool air is drawn in through soffit vents while the hot air is exhausted out through louvers in the cupola side panels. This is a project that can easily be completed in a weekend and will pay back big benefits by reducing the need for air conditioning. And it will give you a perfect spot to mount a weather-vane! This packet of plans shows how to build four handsome cupolas in various sizes to suit your requirements, skill level and budget. (#2154...$19.95 plus $3.75 shipping charge).

Sports Scope

Men's fastball team to participate in nationals

SASKATOON, Saskatchewan will be the site of this year's Canadian National Fastpitch Championships, and Terrace will one of three B.C. teams there.

The Merchants fastball team is making the trek east for the tournament which begins on Aug. 27. The team played four exhibition games in Prince George last weekend in preparation for the event. The team is also planning a trip to Victoria.

Both Victoria and Prince George are also taking part in the championships so the exhibition games will serve as a warm-up for the tournament.

This year, pitching staff has been increased to five on the team, so a tired throwing squad shouldn't be a problem. The team just missed making it to the final round of eight at last year's tournament in St. Thomas, Ontario, where they were the only team from B.C.

Senior Games travel plans finalized

THEY'RE READY to go. The local representatives from the Zone 10 Senior Games have completed travel plans to Kelowna, to participate in the September event.

The games will feature a variety of sports and games, including cards, slo-pitch and swimming among many others. The next regular meeting for the group will be held at the Happy Gang Centre on Aug. 12 at 2 p.m.. For more information contact Maxine at 638-8648.

ICBC vehicle makes appearance at races

A 1983 Z28 Camaro, painted bright blue and silver surprised a few people at the Terrace/Kitimat Airport drag races this past weekend.

The car was there as part of ICBC's Street Legal program. The program's aim is to teach young people that it's better to race at events like the drags rather than on the street.

The vehicle is painted with white racing stripes and is powered by a 383 Stroker motor. It makes appearances at races across the province.

Minor hockey school starts up soon

HOCKEY SCHOOL is back starting this month in preparation for the Minor League season which kicks off in fall.

This year's program will feature an enhanced goaltending session - by popular demand - and a power skating program.

"We're giving kids a real opportunity here, especially those who can't afford the more expensive schools," said organizer Brian Downie.

Instructors will be local players who have played here at the junior level. So far, 60 have enrolled, 100 or more are expected for the Aug. 21 start. It's open to boys and girls aged 5 to 16. For registration information contact Pat Zaporzan at 635-2537.

By JACQUES CORSTANJE

Terrace Men's Soccer Ass'n DURING THIS past week of play the battle for first place heated up as Super BM and the Back Eddy Internationals met for their third match of the season.

There was a large crowd on hand at the Caledonia Senior Secondary Field to watch as the Internationals took the early lead.

Simon Dodd of the Internationals took on the Super BM defence and put a shot into the Super BM net. Minutes later, Simon scored again, this time heading the ball in off a corner kick.

The pressure was on Super BM and they responded as Brian Barwise and Brian McConnell each put the ball past Internationals keeper Michael McAllister's hands and International's Ted Ewald pounced on the loose ball and put it in the net.

Super BM wasn't finished yet as Brian Barwise responded by scoring his second goal of the game. A few minutes later Nilton Praticante took the ball around two Internationals defencemen and launched a blistering shot from 25 yards out into the Internationals net.

The Internationals pressed for the tying goal. With less than a minute to go in the game, Charlie Smoley was sent in alone on a breakaway but he put the shot over the crossbar.

This gave Super BM a 4-3 win and the Internationals their first loss of the season. Super BM is now in position to take over first place in the standings.

Super BM still has three games in hand over the Internationals.

The final regular season meeting of these teams takes place Sunday, Sept. 10 at 4:30 p.m. at the Thornhill Regional field.

Labour Day soccer fest

THE TERRACE Mens Soccer Association is now preparing for the third annual Bell Pole Invitational Soccer Tournament, slated for the Labour Day weekend, Sept. 1-4 2000.

Teams from throughout the northwest and the Queen Charlotte Islands will be coming to Terrace to participate. The entry fee is $300 per team, and over $3,000 in prizes are awaiting the winners.

Tournament Information can be obtained by contacting Jacques at 635-4368 or Terry at 632-7378.

King of the Mountain will be crowned on the weekend

YOU MIGHT say it's an "almost annual" event.

Cancelled last year due to lack of an organizing staff, the King of the Mountain race up Terrace Mountain is set to resume this year on Aug. 6.

As in previous years, the event will coincide with Riverboat Days festivities.

Normally, the event draws at least 50 racers from around the northwest, who complete the part-street, part-trail circuit which starts at the arena.

The event is the premiere summer race in Terrace - as part of the calendar of B.C. Road Running events supported by B.C. Athletics.

Last year, some racers showed up despite the disruption. The event has also been cancelled once before prior to that because of the same problem.

For more information about the race call Jack at 638-0751.

Swim club encouraged by Barton's provincial showing

THE TERRACE Blueback swim team is heralding Jenine Barton's performance at the Provincials and Nationals last month as a good sign for the future.

Barton was the lone Terrace representative at the nationals in Toronto, where she entered with a ranking of 75th.

"The results are very encouraging since Jenine has two years left in her age group," said Mike Carlyle.

Barton placed 34th overall in the 200 metre butterfly, and set a club record in the 100 metre event.

At the provincials, held July 13-16, Barton also performed well, finishing 5th in the 200 metre backstroke. She also broke records for the 400 metre and 800 metre freestyle swim.

William Shack was also at the provincials, swimming in his first B.C. competition. He placed 25th in the 1500 metre freestyle swim.

THE PRINCE GEORGE team takes a celebratory dance around Rotary Field on July 28 after winning the Babe Ruth Provincial championships.

RIVERBOAT DAYS 2000

New and old combining for an exciting weekend

By Karlene Clark, President
Terrace Riverboat
Days Committee

RIVERBOAT DAYS is once again here, and the Riverboat Days Committee would like to invite everyone to participate in the many and varied festivities.

Back again this year are some of the long time favourites such as the Slo-Pitch Tournament, Pancake Breakfasts, Parade, Concerts in the Park, Stock Car racing, The Slingers Race, The Pioneer Picnic, and the Kitsumkalum Salmon Barbecue, as well as the Fireworks and the Wild Duck Race.

Also returning is the Monte Cristo Challenge, formerly known as the Seniors Mile. This fund raising event for the Seniors Games will be held an hour earlier this year.

We will also see the repeat of the Skeena Valley Emergency Services Challenge, The Soap Box Derby, The Kiddies Parade, Jail & Bail, Terraceview Lodge Children's Afternoon and T-shirt Friday.

The committee invites everyone to some new events this year. Terrace Little Theatre is having a nightly production from July 31 to August 6. Ksan House Society is hosting a Pond Tour, and the Terrace, Co-op is having two events, the Tremendous Tricycle Trip for children, and the Wild and Wet Wheelbarrow Race for teens and adults.

Monday, after the Duck Race, stay on Ferry Island for a Treasure Hunt and the opportunity to take a Riverboat Ride for only $5 a person.

This year to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Old Skeena Bridge, the Riverboat Days Committee and Terrace Tourism Council are hosting a re-dedication ceremony on Sunday, August 6.

The City of Terrace and B.C. Transit have very generously arranged for a free shuttle between some of the more outlying events as well as providing free rides for the regular Saturday schedule.

So everyone walk, run or ride the bus on Riverboat Days Weekend.

Take part in these fun activities that have been arranged and hosted by the community minded businesses and organizations of our great city.

THE EMERGENCY Services Challenge is becoming a Riverboat Days tradition as teams from local agencies use some of the tools of the trade in a variety of competitions. There's races involving stretchers and ladders to be climbed while carrying buckets of water. It takes place Aug. 6 in the Skeena Mall parking lot from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

THERE'S PLENTY of smiles and spirit to go around this year's Riverboat Days celebrations here in Terrace. Festivities begin with opening ceremonies in George Little Park beginning at 7 p.m. and conclude Monday afternoon with river boat rides on the Skeena River from Ferry Island. In between there's a parade and lots of food.

ALIENS AND PUMPKIN TOSSERS. You never know who is going to show up on a float in the annual Riverboat Days parade. The parade begins at 11 a.m., proceeding down Lakelse Ave. from the corner of Lakelse and Eby, ending up at the legion.

Thousands to line street for this year's parade

BIGGER AND BETTER than ever.

That's what Riverboat Days parade organizer Joyce Bradley is anticipating for the event.

Thousands of spectators line the streets for the parade, which starts near city hall and heads east along Lakelse Ave. to the Legion.

It starts at 11:00 a.m. on Saturday, Aug. 5.

"Everybody loves a parade, it doesn't matter if you're two or 92," says Bradley.

"It puts a smile on everyone's face from young to old," she said. "It really brings the community together."

It's Bradley's ninth year overseeing the parade.

This year brings some new floats, she said.

It's often an opportunity for a business or organization to enter a float to showcase their activities, she added.

For the first time, she said, the Terrace Beautification Society will have a float in the parade.

So will a group promoting a Class of 1965 reunion.

Also appearing will be two floats from Prince Rupert - one from the city there and another from a Rupert theatre group.

Unusual performers may include a local belly dancing group and a 10-foot tall clown on stilts, she said.

"It's one of the biggest parts of Riverboat Days and one of the biggest gatherings for the whole weekend," Bradley said.

"Every year we get more and more people out," she said. "There must have been 5,000 people lining the streets last year."

The increasing popularity can mean traffic congestion downtown and scarce parking.

But one way to avoid that is to take advantage of free and expanded bus service that will be available this year to help transport people to Riverboat Days events.

RIVERBOAT DAYS 2000

Captain, Queen have solid roots in the community

By JENNIFER LANG
FOR MANY Terrace residents, this year's Queen and Captain of Riverboat Days will need no introduction.

It's no secret that Bill and Helene McRae are well known for their professional and volunteer contributions to the community and area over the years.

It's hard to imagine what Terrace would be like without people like them. Both born and raised in the northwest, the McRaes have seen the Terrace and surrounding communities here grow from small frontier settlements where life was hard but rewarding, to the determined, thriving places they are today.

Both explain their community involvement in modest terms. Perhaps it's shaped by their early years, when neighbours in the northwest had to rely on one another.

Helene, who spent her early years at Kitselas Canyon, started working at her father's sawmill in Usk when she was old enough. She met Bill, who was born in Smithers, when he moved to Usk to take over his dad's store in 1948, after serving with the Royal Canadian Scottish Battalion during the Second World War.

Since Helene needed to use Usk's only phone, located at the store, for business, it wasn't long before she met Bill. "You met everyone in town," she explains.

The pair married in 1951, and Bill joined his father-in-law's business, the Adams Lumber Company Ltd. Four of the McRae's five children were born while the family lived in Usk.

Helene remembers hauling water home as a young mom in the 1950s, a decade that saw her continuing to work at the Usk sawmill office.

By 1959, the Usk sawmill had become obsolete, so the McRaes moved to Terrace, where Bill and three Vancouver partners started up Skeena Sawmills, a company that celebrates 40 years in business this Aug. 11.

Still active citizens, the McRaes claim to be slowing down, despite all evidence to the contrary. Bill is a forestry consultant and Helene is currently at work on Volume Two of Pioneer Legacy, a book that continues the historical research into the region's past begun by the late Norma Bennett.

All proceeds from Pioneer Legacy went to the R.E.M. Lee Hospital Foundation, a charity that raises money to pay for medical equipment at Mills Memorial Hospital, a facility that remains close to the McRaes' hearts. Helene served for two decades on the hospital auxiliary, and Bill has been a member of the hospital board.

Both have been actively involved with the hospital foundation. For four years, the McRaes organized and published cash calendars for the REM Lee Hospital Foundation. The popular prize calendars were a hit – and a money-maker.

The calendars brought in thousands of dollars to help with the community-wide effort that resulted in the purchase of Mills Memorial's CT scanner. Health minister Elizabeth Cull awarded them with a joint volunteer award for their efforts.

Bill has served on the hospital board, and as a municipal councillor. He was a member of the finance committee that made the Terrace arena a reality, but suspects he was named a Freeman of the City of Terrace, a ceremonial title, for another reason.

He played an instrumental role in ensuring the federal employment bridging assistance program got off the ground in the northwest. Bill says the program provided millions of dollars in assistance for people thrown out of work during the recession of the early 1980s when the forestry industry took a severe downturn. In 1989, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney wrote to personally congratulate Bill.

This weekend, as Captain and Queen of Riverboat Days, the McRaes will appear at as many events as possible.

Bill's favourite event is the parade, which is fortunate, because they're going to be in it. Helene says she wants locals and visitors to have fun. "I hope they'll turn out to the events, and enjoy themselves," she says.

RIVERBOAT DAYS Captain and Queen Bill and Helene McRae with a Victrola gramophone, a type of record player that was popular in the early part of the 20th century.

Everywhere young people gathered, whether it was a kitchen party or a special dance, Victrolas were an essential component of any social event in the northwest.

RIVERBOAT DAYS 2000

LOCAL SOCCER players will have plenty of competition this weekend as northwestern and Alaskan teams are coming to town for the annual challenge. It takes place at Christy Park on the Saturday and Sunday of Riverboat Days.

Many sports of all sorts for Riverboat Days 2000

NOT ONLY will there be the usual slo-pitch tournament and stock car races at this year's Riverboat Days festival.

Look for some more offbeat, wacky events over the long weekend too.

Events like the dunk tank, tremendous tri-cycle trip, soap box derby, and wild and wet wheelbarrow race will provide some fun between the ceremonies and parades.

The Seniors games will benefit again from the annual Riverboat Days Mile - or Monte Cristo Challenge - walk from the legion to City Hall, at 10 a.m. Sunday. Proceeds from the event will go toward sending a strong delegation down to Kelowna for the games, which take place in September.

Tennis will be one event missing from this year's schedule. A B.C. Grand Prix event is taking place in Kelowna on the weekend, which conflicts with Riverboat Days. Terrace's own Richard Kriegl will be there.

Whether it's releasing rubber duckies into the Skeena off Ferry Island, or watching some youth soccer action at Christie Park, Riverboat Days won't disappoint for the sporting person.

Youth soccer challenge

Teams from around the northwest and interior will be taking part in this fast-paced tournament. Look for visitors from Alaska too.

Boys under 12 and under 14 teams, and the girls under 14 teams will take part in the two day event, sponsored by Terrace Youth Soccer.

The local teams are just coming off trips to the provincials last month where some captured medals.

The Terrace under 14 team finished on top at Riverboat Days last year, as did the Terrace under 12 team.

All games are slated for Christie Park on Saturday and Sunday.

Stock car races

Parade not fast enough for you? Then head over to the Terrace Speedway where stock car races will tear up the track.

Three classes of cars will compete in this year's event at the Terrace Speedway - still the only oval shaped track in the northwest.

Look for a strong turnout as drivers compete in one of the highest attended events of the year. The speedsters kick off on Saturday at 5:30 p.m., and again on Sunday starting with time trials at noon.

Soap Box Derby

Part of Park Avenue will be closed off most of the day Sunday, but not to young racers.

The second annual soap-box derby will be

Many sports taking place

speeding down the downtown street from the aquatic centre beginning at 11 a.m. The event is open to kids aged 9 to 12, who can sign up by attending a booth at Park Ave. and Kalum St. at 11 a.m.

The carts will be built by local sponsors, and the event will be hosted by the Terrace RCMP.

Slingers race

It's baa-aack. The locally infamous slingers race, where beverage servers are pitted against beverage servers is sure to draw a large crowd.

This is the 16th year for the intoxicating event. This year, the Northern Motor Inn is playing host.

Music, food, games and a beer garden will be part of the fun, starting at 1:00 p.m. on Sunday.

Other events

How about a tremendous tricycle trip? On Sunday at 1:30 at the Terrace Co-op Farm and Garden Centre, kids aged 5 to 12 will have a chance to race through obstacles as partners.

Been longing to dunk someone famous? Saturday's your chance beginning at 11 a.m. in the Safeway parking lot. Proceeds go to the Terrace Cancer Resource Center.

Sunday at 1 p.m. try getting a little wild and wet with the Terrace Co-operative Association's Wheelbarrow Race. The event is open to those aged 16 and over. You might win some cool prizes like a drill kit or a deluxe foldable camping chair. Check out the Terrace Co-op centre on Keith Avenue.

Little yellow duckies will be floating downstream from Ferry Island on Monday, with the popular annual Wild Duck Race. Support your duck and grab your tickets from any Terrace Rotary member.

SOAPBOX RACERS in last year's derby were are at the ready and waiting for starter Const. Kurt Grabinsky to let them go.

Slow? Not this tourney

IT MAY be called "slo-pitch", but the action is anything but slow. With nearly 20 of the top teams from around the northwest taking part, this year's Riverboat Days slo-pitch tournament promises to provide some hard hitting thrills.

The tournament is mixed at least four women must play on each team.

Last year, the top A class event was captured by the West Point Rentals team. This year, one of the local favourites is the Back Eddy, Pub team, who will participate in the A Event, facing the highest calibre challengers from elsewhere in the northwest.

The Terrace teams will consist of both top teams like West Point, and other players from the Terrace league which plays in the Thornhill school fields twice a week during the summer months.

Teams from Smithers and Kitimat won the B event last year, so revenge from the hometown teams will no doubt be on the agenda.

The action kicks off at 6 p.m. on Friday Aug. 4. Games will be played at Riverside Ball Park, Thornhill Primary, and Regional Fields.

The games continue all day through the event, wrapping up on the Monday night.

RIVERBOAT DAYS

RIVERBOAT DAYS 2000

Island treasure hunt adds to events for children

THE FIRST-EVER Ferry Island Treasure Hunt promises to challenge even the most sneakest of sleuths and cleverest of clue-finders.

The Ferry Island Treasure Hunt gets underway at 2 p.m. Aug. 7, and since there's no loot without someone to plunder it first, the treasure hunt will have a pirate theme. Ahoy!

Entrants (children accompanied by an adult, please) will have to comb through selected trails on the island hunting for clues that will lead them to the treasure.

There's also a riddle to be solved along the way. It's going to take someone with a sharp eye to figure it out. Prizes for correct answers will be awarded in separate categories for adult male, adult female, family, and children, but everyone who completes the event will take home a share of the loot: a gold-covered chocolate coin.

This event, sponsored by the Skeena Valley Rotary Club, is aimed at older children and especially adults, but it's sure to be fun for the whole family.

Of course, there are a host of events designed specifically with children in mind during Riverboat Days, too, starting off on Friday with the Afternoon for Kids at Terraceview Lodge, between 2 and 3:30 p.m. on the grounds. It's a Western-style afternoon of fun, open to ages 2 to 8. Wearing Western duds is encouraged. Activities include face painting, storytelling, and farm games. There will also be "critters".

On Saturday and Sunday, Shoppers Drug Mart presents a Children's Village, featuring the Life Bear Bouncer, activities, tattoos, coloring, and the huggable bear mascot. The village is open from 1 to 8 p.m. on Saturday, and from 1 to 6 p.m. Sunday in George Little Memorial Park.

At 1:30 p.m. Saturday, the Terrace Coop's farm and garden centre hosts the Tremendous Tricycle Trip for kids aged 5 to 12 years. There will be an obstacle course for races done by riding partners. Prizes for different age group categories.

Also on Saturday, from noon to 8 p.m. Concerts in the Park, presented by Sight and Sound at George Little Memorial Park, showcases performers from across the northwest. Kid's activities, food, and refreshment will be provided by local vendors. Concerts in the Park continues Sunday.

The second annual Soap Box Derby takes place between 11 a.m. and 4 p.m. Sunday. This event is for kids aged 9 to 14. It's sponsored by Sight and Sound. The Pioneer Picnic takes place Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m. at Heritage Park Museum. There will be plenty of things for families to do, including a picnic and old-fashioned games and activities. There will also be live music. The event is presented by the Knights of Columbus. There is a small entry charge.

On Monday, George Little Park is the location for the Second Annual Kiddies Parade. Decorate bikes, wagons and tricycles, wear a costume, and win prizes. The parade starts at 11 a.m.

From noon to 4 p.m., ICBC hosts a Children's Health, Safety and Education Festival, an event filled with games, food, and information on a whole range of topics and interests. The band, Impact, will provide musical entertainment.

Over at Ferry Island, the ever-popular Wild Duck Race takes place at 1 p.m., when 5,000 yellow rubber duckies are released into the Skeena River. The first one across the finish line wins. Tickets available from any Terrace Rotary Club member.

Take a ride on the river

IF YOU'VE ever wanted to take a boat ride on the Skeena River, be sure to clear some room in your Riverboat Days calendar for a unique opportunity taking place out on the water this year.

A local boat tour operator is giving rides on the Skeena Aug. 7.

The tours will set off from the shoreline of Ferry Island. Passengers will be transported downstream past Little Island, the south side of Terrace, Braun's Island, and Hells Gate Slough before stopping at the mouth of the Kitsumkalum River, the site of the historical Terrace gateway, Eby's Landing.

It's a chance for modern day residents of Greater Terrace to glimpse the river from the same vantage point as the early 20th century settlers arriving in the region.

In other words, the tours will put the "river" back in Riverboat Days. Clark, a stylist who owns the hair salon, Images by Karlene, says the idea came to her when a client of hers observed: "I don't know why it's called Riverboat Days when everyone has a riverboat."

Clark realized the client was onto something big. Why not offer river boat tours? Later that night, she decided to track down someone with a boat who might agree to operate tours. Her search didn't take long. Fred Straw of North Pacific Jet Boat Ltd., a local company operating out of Terrace, gladly offered to do tours.

Co-sponsored by the Terrace Tourism Council, the modestly-priced river boat tours will launch from the eastern shore of Ferry Island between 2 and 5 p.m. on Monday, Aug. 7.

Participants should leave their vehicles at the parking lot at Ferry Island and walk to the landing site from there. Signs will point the way. Tickets available on site.

RIVERBOAT DAYS 2000

IF YOU ARE in the mood for a bit of challenging theatre during Riverboat Days, then Terrace Little Theatre's Vampire Lesbians of Sodom just may be for you. A word of warning - there are adult scenes and language.

Different kind of play being performed here

IMAGINE Hollywood controlled by rival diva vampires. Add an innocent virgin girl and an angry fiancé into the mix and you have the newest play to hit Terrace.

Charles Busch's, Vampire Lesbians of Sodom is already causing waves through the community - and it just hit the stage.

"Some people won't let me hang posters up," said Robert Dugdale, director and an actor in the play. "But what they don't understand is that the most shocking thing about the entire play is the title."

The play is a black comedy that follows two rival vampires through out the ages.

Dugdale says he chose the piece because he "wanted to do something that people here wouldn't ordinarily see."

Being placed both in front and behind the scenes is new to Dugdale, who has spent most of his time as a professional actor.

"I'm more of an actor," he said. "That is where my passion lies. I'm finding it hard to be focused on two things at once."

But even with the added job as director, Dugdale doesn't seem too stressed out.

He emphasized the relaxed nature and almost family-like structure within the play's cast. "We're having a lot of fun," Dugdale said.

The production is a collaboration between Cold Dark Matter productions and the Terrace Little Theatre and will be competing at the Prince Rupert Udder Fringe Festival, August 10-12.

The festival is an annual affair giving the opportunity for directors and actors to showcase their talent to the northwest.

But before Lesbian Vampires of Sodom hits the stage, it is running at the McColl Playhouse until Aug. 6 as a Riverboat Days event. Tickets are available at Uniglobe travel.

The engineers at Yamaha have done it again. Introducing... the KODIAK ULTRAMATIC, a phenomenally versatile ATV, built in the mold of the unstoppable GRIZZLY.

The new Kodiak Ultramatic is truly an engineering accomplishment. It's the lightest in its class, while still incorporating standard features like: "Ultramatic" transmission (full engine braking and a hassle-free parking lock system), liquid-cooled 401cc power plant, "On-Command" 2WD to 4WD push-button shift system, and disc brakes (front and back!).

The Kodiak Ultramatic, built to play hard, but remember, when it's time to work, nothing pulls like a Yamaha BEAR!!!!

Cheers to George Little

Terrace's founder is remembered

By Yvonne Moen

AS WE celebrate Riverboat days it is important not to forget George Little, the founder of Terrace.

It was on March 10, 1905 that Little first camped on the shores of the Skeena River, at Little Canyon. He arrived in Terrace by snowshoeing over the Kitimat Trail.

Little had become tired of the hustle and bustle of the Yukon Gold rush in 1898, and was heading to the Bulkley Valley, which he had heard was a wonderful place to settle.

But as he gazed over the beautiful Skeena and Kitsumkallum valleys, he realized he had found what he was looking for. He decided to make the area his home.

As he gazed over the beautiful Skeena and Kitsumkallum valleys, he realized he had found what he was looking for. He decided to make the area his home.

GEORGE LITTLE, Terrace's founder, was born in Attwood, Ontario. He first settled here in 1905.

When the government offered the land for sale in 1905, Little staked his claim on acres of heavily wooded land, including the site on which Terrace stands today.

On June 26, 1912, Little married his wife Clara Beste. They had five children: Dudley (June 9, 1914), twins Dorothy and Clara (May 9, 1916), Gordon (January 22, 1921) and Edith (April 15, 1922).

Nearly one year before his death, Little rode the first C.N.R. train to make the Terrace-Kitimat run. This was the same route he first snowshoed across nearly a century earlier.

Little was born November 9, 1878 on a farm near Attwood, Ontario. His parents were John and Helen Little.

He died of a heart attack December 30, 1955.

Don't miss the fireworks

A fireworks display will take place on Ferry Island Saturday night at 11 p.m.

In case of rain, the fireworks will be displayed Sunday evening.

The Old Skeena Bridge will be closed from 10 p.m. until 11:30 the evening of the show.

Old bridge turns 75 years old

By JENNIFER LANG

The Old Skeena Bridge, one of Terrace's longest-serving and most recognizable landmarks, will be the star attraction this Sunday, Aug. 6 when its 75th anniversary will be marked by a ribbon-cutting ceremony, a vintage car cavalcade, and other surprises.

In much the same manner as the bridge opened for business back on July 21, 1925, dignitaries and the public will gather at the south side of the bridge for a re-dedication ceremony Aug. 6 recognizing the last single-lane curved bridge in North America.

In honour of the historic anniversary, the bridge will be closed to traffic, allowing pedestrians to take a closer look at a structure that has provided Terrace with a reliable and safe route across the Skeena River for 75 years.

A special anniversary plaque and a large, three-paneled, wooden sign detailing the bridge's history will be unveiled at the ceremony, which will also feature a parade of vintage cars – the only motor traffic allowed to cross the bridge during the event.

Live music and festivities begin at 10 a.m. at the Tom Thornhill Memorial and run until noon. The event is sponsored by the Terrace Riverboat Days Society and the Terrace Tourism Council.

Opening day in 1925 was a simple but significant affair. Provincial minister of lands Thomas "Duff" Pattullo performed the original ribbon-cutting ceremony, joined by political colleagues and residents of the Terrace area. Pattullo eventually became a Liberal premier of B.C. and represented the Prince Rupert area in the provincial legislature.

The distinctive, curving bridge replaced the ferry system that had been deemed inadequate to serve the volume of traffic.

Walter McConnell, now in his 80s, moved to Terrace in 1921, just a few years before the Skeena Bridge was built. In those days travelers bound for the cabins at Lakelse Lake crossed the Skeena using two separate ferries, a trip he recalls took about 45 minutes. The first ferry, and later (after a ferryman lost his life) a wooden bridge, ran between what's now the riverbank at Haugland Street and the west side of Ferry Island. Pedestrians, horse-drawn carts, and even vehicles, disembarked, crossed the island, and then took another ferry from Ferry Island to Thornhill Landing.

"It would take a whole day to go there and back," he says, referring to the trip from town to Lakelse Lake. "It was an old gravel road and

OPENED IN 1925, the Old Skeena Bridge remains a vital connection across the Skeena River. This photo of a man described as Mr. Hunter and Sam Kirkaldy dates back to those earlier days. The bridge's years of service will be highlighted this Sunday through a ceremony you'd have to push your car up some of the hills."

While McConnell was too young to take much notice of the hubbub surrounding the Skeena Bridge's grand opening, he does remember the significant change the bridge made. "It was a lot better to go across the river. You didn't have to fool around with those ferries."

McConnell's late wife Blackie (nee Kenney) lost her father in a terrible accident on the Skeena when a cable used for the ferry got caught in a tree. He went to chop the cable free, and his axe got stuck, pulling him down into the river.

In the early 1950s, McConnell was one of the workers who helped pound and blast rock to widen and straighten the road approach to the north side of the bridge. "It was just a little trail to start with."

Although the Skeena Bridge introduced safe passage across the Skeena, making possible logging ventures up the Copper River and in the Kitimat Valley because it could handle truck traffic, change for the growing town came slowly.

According to a 1932 Department of Public Works report, the district of Terrace's population was just 1,200. The number of vehicles crossing the bridge when tallied one day came to 106, with 30 percent of that volume in the form of horse traffic.

McConnell says it wasn't until the highway (completed by soldiers stationed in the northwest during the Second World War), and much later, the completion in the early 1970s of the "New" bridge – the Dudley Little bridges – that Terrace began its climb to its present-day position as a regional supply and service centre.

Other significant dates for what we affectionately call the "Old" bridge include the Terrace flood of 1936, when the swiftly rising waters of the Skeena washed away some of the pilings at its southern end – taking 300 feet of decking along with it. Between May 29 and Aug. 15 of that year passengers parked their cars at the northern end, walked across, and stepped down to the opposing bank using a ladder while repairs were made.

The bridge's curves were altered in 1954, when the whole southern end of the structure was moved upstream to accommodate the new railway bridge linking Terrace and the brand-new industrial town of Kitimat. It wasn't until 1961 that the bridge's traffic lights were installed.
